

King's University College at Western University welcomes new Manager of Communications and Media Relations

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE – March 11, 2013

King's University College at Western University is pleased to announce the appointment of Jane Antoniak as its new Manager of Communications and Media Relations.

“Jane will assist faculty, staff, administration and students as we continue to tell the good news story of King's University College,” says David Sylvester, Principal of King's. “We look forward to her arrival at King's on March 18th.”

Antoniak holds a bachelor of journalism from Carleton University and is currently working on her post-graduate certificate in Public Relations at Western University. The latest member of the King's community brings a wealth of experience in the communications sector, serving as an independent consultant, former news reporter (Global Television, CBC Radio, and the first female sports reporter for CBC National Radio Sports), adjunct professor at Western University's Graduate School of Journalism, and a communications professional for several different organizations.

“I am thrilled to be joining the King's University College team at such an exciting time in its history. I look forward to showcasing the various voices and stories which make up King's rich Liberal Arts tradition,” says Antoniak. “With the opening of the new Darryl J. King Student Life Centre, a continued growth of enrolment from across Canada and abroad combined with teaching and research excellence, it is a fantastic time to help King's reach new levels of public awareness. I am grateful for the opportunity and look forward to working with faculty, staff, students and alumni.”
