

Dismantling Rob Ford, Social Media & Politics at King's Hour

September 23, 2015

London, ON- The inaugural King's Hour speaker series launches today, Wednesday September 23, 2015, at 3:30 p.m. with Globe and Mail reporter Robyn Doolittle speaking about her new book, Crazy Town: The Rob Ford Story, social media and politics.

The event is open to all in the Joanne and Peter Kenny Theatre, Darryl J. King Student Life Centre and is free of admission.

King's Hour is:

- A series of culturally and academically engaging events of common interest to the entire King's community (students, faculty, staff, and alumni)
- Lectures, discussions or performances on relevant and timely issues of importance to our community and society as a whole
- A conversation that will begin in the Kenny Theatre and continue into the classroom and beyond
- Follow on Twitter: @Kings_Hour

All King's Hour events start at 3:30pm and will end promptly at 4:20pm to allow students and faculty time to get to their 4:30pm classes. Events will be set up to allow for comments/questions from the audience.

Media: parking in lot 1 on north side of Epworth Ave. Please advise gate attendant by showing media credentials.
