Wooden Crest in King Centre

The official King's crest over the fireplace in the Darryl J. King Student Life Centre was hand-carved by Orthodox iconographer Jonathan Pageau in 2013.

The crest, sponsored by Aramark, was installed in celebration of the university's 60th anniversary. The words written in Latin come from the Gospel of John. The letters A and Ω refer to God, whereas the X and P in the middle refers to Christ. The two crossed keys on the shield refers to King's historic relationship to St. Peter's Seminary, and the crown on top speaks to Christ the King, as that was the university's original name.

Stained Glass in King Centre

The images on stained glass in King Student Life Centre comprise of three stories: Raising of the Daughter of Jarius, Blessing of Children and Sermon on the mount.

The glass was donated by the Congregation of the Sisters of St. Joseph. As the St. Joseph Hospital in Sarnia was merging with larger secular bodies, its chapel was taken down and these windows were removed. The total 10 leaded panels were then given to King's in 2013.

In 2016, King's decided to put the three of them in the King Centre – the "living room for students" – as an inspiration for students in the community who will learn be teachers, caregivers and social workers.

Nine of the panels are at 39¾" x 139", one is at 39¾" x 112¼".

The Homeless Jesus

The Homeless Jesus statue in the courtyard outside the library depicts Jesus as a homeless person, wrapped in a blanket and sleeping on a park bench. The setting of the sculpture suggests that Jesus is with the most marginalized people in the society.

Made of bronze, this life-sized statue was donated by Christ the King University Parish. The donation was a part of the Student Life Campaign that helped building the Darryl J. King Student Life Centre, which was opened in 2014.

The statue is a replica of Jesus the Homeless made by Ontario artist Timothy Schmalz. The original piece was brought to St. Peter's Square in 2013 and presented to Pope Francis.

This image of Jesus as a servant is an embodiment of how people should put their faith into action, according to Father Michael Béchard, King's Chaplain and director of the Office of Campus Ministry.

Same as the Homeless Jesus, this statue was donated by Christ the King University Parish as a part of the Student Life Campaign.

The Risen Christ

The sculpture of the Risen Christ made of resin was installed in the 1980s on the exterior of the Wemple building as an iconic emblem of the university.

It shows the story of Jesus' resurrection. It depicts that as Jesus comes back from the dead, the burial cloths wrapping his body are falling away.

King's also owns a smaller version of the matching statue in the university chapel.

Abrahamic Courtyard

The art in the Abrahamic courtyard consists of three pieces:

The stainless-steel cross with three copper interlocking rings in the north of the courtyard was made by London based artist Branco Simunac, who is famous for art made in iron. The three rings on the cross represent the Trinity in Christian belief.

The black granite in the centre was made by Ideal Monument, a London company. The Hebrew words carved on it is a passage from the Micah (6:8).
The Kian is a piece in neon glass created by London artist Jamelie Hassan. The word Kian means "soul" in Arabic, “benevolent monarch or King” in Persian, and “ancient one” in Celtic. The script was adapted basing on calligraphy by Ibrahim Badr in Egypt.

Ted Goodden, a former Londoner whose stained glass work has been shown in public for over 40 years. The set was originally displayed at Christ Anglican Church in London, Ontario. Following the church's closure, the panels were donated to King's. Goodden himself attended and spoke at the reception event.

The Angel Band Mobile is a set of stained glass suspended in the lounge of the Labatt Hall in September 2016. The images on the panels portray the seven disciplines of the liberal arts: arithmetica, astronomica, dialectica, geometrica, grammatical, musica and rhetorica. The set drops 16 feet high from the ceiling. The stained glass set was created in 2004 by visual artist

The Havelka Paintings
The Havelka paintings on King's campus were painted by Dr. Jaroslav Havelka (1922-1997), who had been teaching at King's for more than 18 years. Most of the works were donated between 2000-2004 by Dr. Havelka's widow, Jane Vincent-Havelka. Up until the 2004-2005 academic year, there had been 116 Havelka pieces donated to King's in celebration of the university's 50th anniversary.

The paintings were installed in five buildings on King's campus: the Cardinal Carter Library, Dante Lenardon Hall, Elizabeth A. "Bessie" Labatt Hall, Monsignor Lester A. Wemple Hall, and Alumni Court. The majority of these pieces were painted in the 1990s after Dr. Havelka's retirement. His works focused on the love of nature, Zen Buddhism, cathedrals and buildings, spirits of compassion and evil, Shakespeare, women, Christianity, peace and social justice. The materials used included plaster, tempera paint, varnish, acrylic, charcoal, pastel and watercolour.

Dr. Havelka was born in Czechoslovakia and immigrated to Canada in 1951. He began chairing the Department of Psychology in 1969 and kept teaching as Professor Emeritus after his retirement in 1987.

In 2004, King's University College published a catalogue Havelka at King's to showcase his work in finer details. The booklet is available for viewing at the Cardinal Carter Library.
