Dr. Liam Kennedy joined the Department of Sociology at King’s in 2016. Liam is happy to be at King’s because of the opportunities for mentorship it provides. He currently teaches Introduction to Criminology, Sociology of Corrections, and Advanced Criminological Theory. He’s also excited to be developing a course entitled Crime, Punishment, and Popular Culture that will explore how crime and punishment are represented in film, television, music, and other forms of pop culture as well as some of the consequences of these depictions.

Broadly speaking, Liam’s research aims to advance our understanding of the daily lives and experiences of prisoners and to critically examine the ways we talk about and respond to crime, deviance, and offenders. He has two projects currently on the go. In the first, he and a colleague are analyzing news media coverage of former Toronto Mayor Rob Ford’s use of crack cocaine so as to unpack our society’s ideas about addiction and recovery. The other project investigates the different ways that audiences interpret and respond to crime media. Beyond that, Liam plans to study how the aging of the prisoner population impacts life inside prisons.

For more information
Department of Sociology
King's University College at Western University Canada
519-433-3491
1-800-265-4406
kings@uwo.ca
www.kings.uwo.ca/sociology/
What study Criminology at King's?

Criminology is the study of legal and extra-legal sanctions, including their effects on individuals, the police, corrections, the judiciary, the state, and social and governmental reactions to it. The Criminology program at King's trains students in public policy, institutions, and critical skill building in data and interpretation. The program creates skilled communicators, researchers, and analysts who can enter the working world as imaginative thinkers with concrete technical abilities, writing, and critical thinking skills that are vital to being successful professionals. Students in their first year at King's will take Sociology 1020, 1020W/X, or 1021E in order to gain entry into a Criminology module in their second year.

Career Options

Few job titles say “criminologist,” but graduates with this degree hold a wide range of positions in the fields of business, community affairs, government, social research and teaching/education. Here are just a few examples of the potential career paths available:

- Court Reporter
- Advertiser
- Policy Analyst
- Labour Relations
- Probation & Parole
- Health Care Admin
- Technical Writer
- Lawyer
- Gerontologist
- Human rights
- Youth outreach
- Foreign service
- Journalist
- Police officer
- Victim Care Officer
- Urban Planner
- Demographer

Course Offerings

King's offers an Honors Specialization, Major and Minor in Criminology to which students apply after completing first year. King's offers a variety of methods, research and theory courses in Sociology and Criminology. Some of the many popular Criminology courses include:

- Crime and Deviance in the Workplace
- Crime, Punishment, and Popular Culture
- Crimes of the Powerful
- Drugs and Society
- Family Conflict and Violence
- Gangsters and the Mob
- Global Health and Human Rights
- Law in the Sociology of Film
- Policing, Security, Surveillance
- Population Change in Canada
- Sociology of Corrections
- Sociology of Deviance
- Sociology of Terrorism
- Vehicles, Villains, Victors
- Violence in Cultural Perspective
- Women in Crime
- Youth and Conflict with the Law

What students have to say

“I've had one of the best experiences here at King's. The Criminology program has opened my eyes and given me insight into what is going on in the world, but more specifically within the judicial system. The professors have excellent knowledge in the subjects they are teaching and are very compassionate about it. I love going to class to see what I will be learning about next. It's never a dull moment!”

Justin Tiseo
'16 BA Criminology (Major)

“Studying criminology at King's is a path that has proven to be highly rewarding and worthwhile. It is a program with outstanding faculty who will mentally challenge their students while addressing and exploring pressing social issues, the realities of crime, misconceptions and methods of prevention. With such a wide selection of courses, the program is able to cater to varying interests. The investigation of corporate crime, the criminal justice system, organized crime, terrorism and youth in conflict are among some of the courses offered. Conducting research, theorizing as well as analyzing and critiquing various works are examples of some of the practical skills students enrolled in criminology will learn that will enable them to thrive in a work environment. I strongly recommend this program to anyone who is passionate about crime and eager to examine the challenges surrounding crime that face our global society today.”

Kristine Petitta
'16 BA (Honors Specialization Criminology, Minor French Studies)

“Being an active member in the Canadian Armed Forces, the Criminology program at King's has really propelled me to succeed and better understand the real world. It has provided me with a solid foundation in which I can use to push myself further in the field of law. Overall, enrolling in the Criminology program at King's is one of the best decisions I ever made.”

Harris Syed
'17 BA Criminology (Major)