Faculty Profile: Dr. Coby Dowdell

An Associate Professor in the Department of English, French, and Writing, Dr. Dowdell teaches eighteenth-century British literature, narrative theory, the history of the novel, and the psychology of literature. His research focuses on the intersection of religious and civic identity, with a particular stress on religious and political extremism during the eighteenth century.

“Human beings are inherently a story-telling species driven by a powerful motivation to create meaning out of the human condition. I invite my students to explore literature from this perspective, as a way of developing their own critical citizenship and broadening their understanding of the human condition.”

Faculty

Claudia Clausius, PhD Toronto
Modern Drama, Postcolonial

Lorraine DiCicco, PhD Western American, Women Writers, The Long Poem

Coby Dowdell, PhD Toronto
Restoration and Eighteenth-Century, Narrative Theory

Krista Lysack, PhD Queen’s
Nineteenth-Century British

Brian Patton, PhD Western
Twentieth-Century British, Popular Culture, Film

Ian Rae, PhD British Columbia
Canadian, Poetics

Paul Werstine, PhD South Carolina
Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada
Shakespeare, Renaissance, Medieval

For more information

Department of English, French, and Writing
266 Epworth Avenue  London, ON  N6A 2M3
1-800-265-4406 or 519-433-3491
www.kings.uwo.ca/english

kings@uwo.ca
The study of English literature prompts us, as the poet Wallace Stevens put it, to find ourselves “more truly and more strange.”

We offer courses in:
- All the major periods from Medieval to Contemporary
- British, Canadian, American, and Postcolonial literature
- Children's literature
- Creative writing
- Drama
- Ecology and literature
- Film
- Literary theory
- Popular culture
- Psychology of literature
- Science fiction
- Speech
- Spanish... and more!

Enhance your English degree by applying to spend a term studying abroad, by joining King's English Association (our student club), or by contributing to King's student publications, readings, and productions.

English graduates are prepared for a variety of professions. In the fast-paced and changeable career dynamics of the 21st century, the skills learned in reading literary and critical texts are basic to success in our knowledge-based economy.

“Congratulations on taking the time to read deeply and broadly, to cultivate yourselves as writers, and to engage with the astonishing array of human experience available to us through novels, essays, poems, blogs, and plays. By spending your B.A. this way, you just made one of the most economically savvy decisions you could have made in an age when we have to seek “robot-proof” jobs. You all have the soft skills that employers want. You’ll start companies we haven't even thought of yet. You’ll write the scripts, video games, business plans, web sites, and novels of the future. And... you will get paid for it!” -- Professor Misty G. Anderson’s convocation address to English majors, May 10, 2017, as reprinted in the Huffington Post.

What they loved about King’s:

“I can honestly say that the English program at King's has been life altering. English has changed and improved the way I think, write, speak, read, and interact in general. There is so much more to English than just reading and then writing about what you read. The skills that we learn in English are transferable to so many day to day aspects of my life and now that I have completed my degree I cannot imagine life without taking English.”
--Nigel Finch ‘17

“The professors are what made King's College so special for me. They are passionate about what they do, and their enthusiasm is infectious. They helped provide me with the knowledge I needed to make use of my English degree.”
--Nicole Winstanley, Vice President, Penguin Random House and Publisher, Penguin Canada

www.kings.uwo.ca/english