

King's Move-In & Opening Ceremonies set for Monday Sept 7

September 4, 2015, London, ON

King's University College, rolls out the welcome mat to more than 3500 new and returning students including 350 who will move into residence on Monday September 7, 2015 starting at 9a.m. Set to greet them, and assist with the move-in, are dozens of Residence Assistants and Sophs (upper year volunteers) along with Dr. David Sylvester, King's Principal and Joe Henry, Dean of Students.

"This is a highlight day of the year for us at King's as we welcome, for the first time, our Class of 2019, their families and friends," says Dr. Sylvester. "This year we have students arriving from 16 countries and 21 partner universities, making King's a globally connected campus."

Move-in day is also an important time of transition for parents of the incoming class. Joe Henry, King's Dean of Students, will offer a seminar for parents on Monday September 7 at 1 p.m. in Labatt Hall, Room 100.

Henry offers some important communications tips for parents as their young adult children move from living at home to attending university:

1. Set some ground rules: From my experience in over 14 years working in post-secondary institutions I have seen students and parents step on campus without any ground rules around how and when they will communicate with each other. Part of independence is to let students experience the journey. This is built on trust and openness. Families should be talking about which situations they will communicate about, how often to expect emails, texts or phone calls. More importantly, in the parents case, decisions need to be made about who will be calling when situations do come up on campus. Hint: Let the students handle it.
2. Become aware of resources and support: Universities like King's have many resources to support students including counselling, learning skills seminars and library information sessions. Parents and students should be reviewing websites and information from post-secondary institutions to help support the transition of students as they adjust to their new surroundings. These resources often have no extra cost and studies have shown that this step positively impacts students' overall success and engagement.
3. Encourage Involvement: Studies have shown that the as students become more involved in campus life and activities then the higher the likelihood is that students will persist in their studies. Now, it doesn't mean that students have to be at every activity, but encouraging students to volunteer with a student group, to get involved in a club or intramural sports, can have a positive impact and create great social connections.

“This is a great time of year. New beginnings and new opportunities are awaiting students on campus. Though careful planning and communication parents can help coach their students so that they can begin their new academic journey as successfully as possible,” says Henry.

King’s Opening Ceremonies are at 3 p.m. in the Joanne & Peter Kenny Theatre (Darryl J. King Student Life Centre). Students will learn cheers and gain advice from faculty, administration and peers. This will be followed by a pizza dinner and then a parade of students from King’s to the TD Waterhouse Stadium for the Western Mustangs football game.

A variety of Orientation Week activities include everything from academic information sessions and safety programming to movie nights, charity events, dances, concerts and an outdoor bonfire both at King’s and Western.

The first day of classes is Thursday September 10th.

For more information please contact:

Jane Antoniak
Manager, Communications & Media Relations
King’s University College
266 Epworth Ave.,
London, ON
communications@kings.uwo.ca
519-433-3491 x 4384
@kingsatwestern
www.kings.uwo.ca