

CALL FOR PRESENTATIONS

Technologies and Pedagogies at King's

High-Impact Learning

Thursday, October 30, 2014

“Student engagement represents both the time and energy students invest in educationally purposeful activities and the effort institutions devote to using effective educational practices” (Kuh et al 2008: 542). “Learning, therefore, depends on institutions and staff generating conditions which stimulate and encourage student involvement and encompasses social, as well as academic, aspects of the student experience” (Bryson and Hardy, 2010).

Presentations should specifically address any of the many aspects of developing and fostering student engagement, both in and out of the classroom. We look to share best practices and persistent challenges as they relate to pedagogy, learning activities, instructional design and course development, faculty development and training, student services, accessible learning opportunities, academic planning and strategy, and research through the assessment and evaluation of learning.

Faculty, students, instructional designers, instructional technologists, academic administrators, and other experts are encouraged to submit proposals which are engaging, informative and may be interactive. Sessions can be targeted to all attendees -- beginners, intermediates, or experts. NEW THIS YEAR: STUDENT POSTER PRESENTATIONS! Students are encouraged to submit poster presentations for this event.

Topics could include:

- Student Engagement in the Classroom/Outside of the Classroom
- High Tech and Low Tech Ways to Engage
- Experiential Learning
- Faculty Development and Support
- Best Practice Examples of Student Engagement
- Universal Design
- Accessible Materials (AODA Compliance – e.g., captioning video clips)
- Leadership and Administration
